India accounts for 60% of total leprosy cases worldwide

Chennai, Jan 30: Despite it being officially declared that leprosy is no longer a public health problem way back in 2005, India is still home to 60% of the global burden of leprosy according to the estimates of World Health Organisation (WHO).

Dr Shirley Andrew G, Consultant Family Physician, Westminster Healthcare, “Unfortunately, India suffers the most from leprosy compared to the rest of the world. This could be because leprosy is a bacterial disease that spreads to close contacts through nasal and upper respiratory tract discharge.”

We are likely to find more cases in the lower socio - economic strata and those residing in overcrowded slums with poor hygiene and sanitation. Nevertheless, it is only a mildly contagious condition, and doesn't spread through contact with the skin. Lack of adequate awareness about leprosy among common people is another reason why India suffers more from the burden. Early symptoms of leprosy hardly get detected thereby leading to late initiation of diagnosis and treatment. Leprosy affects the skin, respiratory tract and nerves, thereby causing deformities in its severe forms. This often leads to social stigma against the patients that prevent them from reaching out to appropriate treatment.

Although patients may get carried away or misguided to opt for alternative forms of treatment for leprosy, one must know that no alternative treatment can cure them of the condition. These therapies can only provide temporary relief from certain symptoms. Only multi-drug therapy that includes antibiotics to fight the leprosy causing bacteria can provide complete and permanent cure by killing the bacteria. India may not be completely free of leprosy, but reporting of new cases have considerably increased due to campaigns such as National leprosy elimination program. This being said, care providers should be more proactive and ensure that the treatment reaches the patients before they reach out for the treatment. This will certainly reduce the burden of existing patients with the condition that need treatment.
